ZingChart Enterprise License

Updated April 27, 2016

Grant of License

The ZingChart Enterprise license is for the development and deployment of internal applications within a single organization. With the Enterprise license, there are no restrictions to the number of domains or number of applications in which ZingChart can be used. However, Enterprise licenses are restricted internal use: they should only be used for internal applications. These applications should be hosted by the licensed organization and only accessed by users who are directly associated to the licensed organization (ie employees, contractors, etc).

The ZingChart Enterprise license can not be used for sellable software products. Additionally, applications using the Enterprise license should not provide access to users outside of the licensee organization, such as customers.

If you are unsure if your users fit within the Enterprise License terms please contact sales@zingchart.com for clarification.

The License File

The Enterprise license does not check against domains. It does internal checks against code in the minified ZingChart library. Please note: no connection to ZingChart servers are required. The ZingChart Enterprise license can be used in secured environments without connection to the public Internet.

Included Support

The purchase of an Enterprise license includes 4 hours of ZingChart Product Support. See our support section for details on additional support.
